Excerpt: .Without doubt the railroad companies are better able to determine what coupler is best suited to the wants of all parties than any one else, and whenever Congress takes some decided stand in this matter the railroads will be quick to agree among themselves which device is best. At the present time, without legislation, the railroads do not like to put a large amount of money into some coupler that an act of Congress may at any time render worthless, but as soon as Congress designates to them what the policy is to be followed and what system is to be used I have no doubt but the cars will be equipped as fast as possible. With all the present devices in use, and more that are liable to follow, the switchmen in making up trains of cars from foreign roads are sure to...
