Afterwards Dagnan-Bouveret painted Breton subjects, which brought him great success and even a first medal with his Pardon in 1889. These pictures mark his new evolution in the poetic sense and also towards an ever lighter and subtler technique. The Lords Supper, which decorates the back wall of the musicroom of the Countess of Beam, is his principal work in the religious and mystic genre. Of late years he has especially devoted himself to the portrait, and has painted, with distinction and style, a certain number of ladies from the Parisian aristocracy. Dagnan-Bouveret has been a member of the Institut since 1900, and an officer of the Legion of Honour since 1892. Dagnan-bouveret. --The Pain Benit...
