Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed Department of Defense (DOD) initiatives to phase out ozone-depleting chemicals. GAO found that: (1) DOD has established internal programs and joint efforts with industry and federal agencies to identify and develop alternatives to using ozone-depleting chemicals; (2) DOD is evaluating, purchasing, and using refrigerant and halon recovery and recycling equipment and has reduced its halon emissions during training and testing activities; (3) the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD) has defined mission-critical uses so broadly that the military departments have significant latitude in identifying uses that can continue beyond the planned phase-out; (4) since DOD has neither identified or tracked all of its ozone-depleting chemical usage quantities, specific uses, and emissions, the services are not fully aware of where and in what quantities all the regulated chemicals are used; (5) although DOD estimates that it will cost about 250 million to test, evaluate, and qualify new materials for mission-critical applications, OSD and the services are slow in providing the resources to ensure that safe and acceptable alternatives will be available to support DOD...
